Subject of Review: Pathogen-contaminated food can contain bacteria, viruses, or parasites, and once ingested or improperly handled can result in illness and even death. Identifying adulterants in imported foods and refusing contaminated shipments help minimize the risk of foodborne illness from foreign products and is essential to keeping U.S. consumers safe. Using import refusal data in the Operational and Administrative System for Import Support (OASIS) database from 2002 to 2019, this report explores import refusal trends in total, annually, by industry, and by country. Our analysis helps identify which pathogen is the most common in refused imports, which industries are the most frequently refused in total and by pathogen type, which countries are the most frequently refused in total and by pathogen type, and what changes have occurred over time.

Purpose of Review: The purpose of the review is to ensure the high-quality of the economic analysis, transparent explanation of methods, objective interpretation of results, and effective communication to the intended audience.
